Sometimes all that is needed to revitalize a smile are thin porcelain laminate veneers. With minimal or no removal of natural tooth structure in many cases, these high strength and stunningly beautiful laminates can be used to resurface teeth for the purpose of improving a person's appearance. And when bonded to the hardest outer shell of a tooth, they take on the strength of the tooth plus the added layer of porcelain.

In recent years, attempts at providing minimally invasive, yet truly aesthetically beautiful veneers have fallen short in most dentist's minds.....until now! A new, revolutionary veneer which is individually handcrafted by a handful of master artisans, with today's most beautiful and technologically advanced porcelain materials, that require minimal or no tooth removal, and that are extremely strong, durable, and astonishingly gorgeous are now available.

This May, Robert Shandrick, DMD, FAGD, of Sugarloaf, joined a handful of dentists from around the United States, to study, examine, and place these extraordinarily beautiful ultra-thin veneers, at the private dental suites of world renowned cosmetic dentist, Dr. Ross Nash, in North Carolina. Dr. Nash is a pioneer in cosmetic dentistry. He is the founder and CEO of the Nash Institute dental training facility, in North Carolina. Nash has authored countless articles on cosmetic dental products and techniques, and is a much sought – after lecturer both in the United States and internationally, by dentists wishing to master cosmetic dentistry.

Dr. Shandrick is a fellow with the Academy of General Dentistry and a fellow at the prestigious Las Vegas Institute of Advanced Dental Studies, in Las Vegas, Nevada.
